sorry, if there was no such thing as a bio weaponized version of a naturally occurring coronavirus ivermectin would not be saving peoples lives.

(And no - the "there's no such thing as a virus" meme is a psyop. Human bodies do not "Detox" themselves to death. Viral illnesses are illnesses where sometimes the virus does kill it's host. There's no "natural" detox process behind it. It is inflammation from the body trying to kill off a particle that is damaging it i.e. a virus or bacteria. If we don't find any bacteria growing in the blood, we look for cuturable viruses that should not be present in healthy blood)

COVID -19 is engineered, Ivermectin kills it and both I have directly observed. Ivermectin does not kill influenza type infections, and COVID-19 infections have different symptoms from influenzas.

Please stop this there's no such thing as xyz etc, psyop.

That is not true Daniel.

A drug having an effect is not proof of the cause of a dis-ease.

Labelling a drug "antiviral" (or "anti-parasitic") and labelling a disease "viral" is not proof of a virus. Logic please.

People get sick for many reasons, people die for many reasons - that has always been the case. Have you really forgotten that toxins are toxic? That stress kills? That malnutrition, lack of exercise, lack of fresh air, etc etc etc can all lead to sickness?

And obviously our bodies do detox and when a nose is running or a fever is happening some claim the body is ejecting ("detoxing from") a virus. The problem is that virology was never a science and no virus (replication-competent obligate intra-cellular parasite that transmits between hosts via natural modes of exposure and causes disease) was ever scientifically/logically shown to exist. A "virus" has never been shown to be the cause of any disease.

(And when a body is overwhelmed with toxicity and cannot detox fast enough, sometimes those bodies die... which some might call "detoxing to death" although I have never heard that phrase.).

"Covid-19" doesn't exist. It's defined as being caused by a virus and "confirmed" with meaningless, fraudulent, impossible-to-validate tests. It's a meaningless label slapped onto other diseases and good health ("non-symptomatic").

This isn't a psych-op, it's the shocking reality that some have known for decades and many have learned in the last 2 years. It's not rocket science, anyone applying a modicum of logic can see that the methods of virology are severely flawed. Read a "virus isolation and sequencing" paper (including the METHODS) and then get back to me.

Empty claims do not cut it. You're better than that.

I have a lot of respect for you Daniel (unlike some of your "freedom" MD colleagues), so please don't take this as a personal attack.

Best wishes,
Christine

toxins do not self replicate. 1 person with gulf war syndrome returning to the usa doesn't turn into 10 gulf war syndromes in a suburb of dallas.

this is the fundamental Error in the "everything is a toxin / detox" meme.

viruses self replicate, just like all living things anything that self replicates can evolve.

Anyone who oversimplifies nature has fallen into a mental trap.

Imaginary viruses don't self-replicate either. Show us proof of a real one if you can.

Cells poisoned, starved and breaking down in a dish are not proof of a replicating virus.

Contagion has never been proven either. Serious attempts have been made to demonstrate contagion and all failed. I'm talking about studies done years ago by public health officials trying to show that "Spanish flu" was contagious, by taking bodily fluids from sick people and putting them in healthy "volunteers". No one got sick. This sort of thing was tried over and over and over again in myriad ways and it was a complete failure every time.

Many of these studies are reviewed in this documentary:

End of Germ Theory:

<https://rumble.com/v1ak9zn-the-end-of-germ-theory-by-spacebusters.html>

People getting sick at the same place and time is not proof of contagion. Like Dr. Cowan says, if you think it is, you must think that Hiroshima and Chernobyl were caused by viruses. Scurvy was originally blamed on a contagious "germ", until they realized it was vit D deficiency.

Anecdotal observations and epidemiology cannot prove contagion. Controlled experiments are needed.

I never said "everything is a toxin". I already mentioned stress and deficiencies. And toxic environmental exposures obviously exist, surely you don't deny that. Shared exposures, shared stressors (i.e. covid terrorism, covid countermeasures), shared food, shared weather, shared electromagnetic influences, etc etc.

I have never self replicated, so not sure how you can say that all living things self replicate.

We're not the ones oversimplifying by trying to blame everything on "germs". We recognize that many factors contribute to disease. I've been saying this all along.

Daniel, please just read a "virus isolation and sequencing" paper and tell me if you consider it scientific. I attach for you the earliest covid papers out of China.

Cheers,
Christine

Please don't use stupid analogies disrespecting people who died of radiation poisoning.

If you're too ignorant to see how one patient with radiation poisoning cannot spread it to another person who doesn't have radiation poisoning, you are too brainwashed to reason with.

Please tell me that's a joke Daniel? I said nothing remotely disrespectful to anyone.

I pointed out the stupidity of assuming that: just because people in the same vicinity get sick at the same time it's caused by a virus.

My point, which somehow flew right over your head, is that they did (as far as I know) die of radiation, not a virus. Tons of people have heard that analogy and you are literally the first person I've heard of who didn't get it or who construed some nonexistent offence.
