Hi Carl,

I see you're making more false claims about me on twitter, insisting that I know that viruses exist. Why would you do that? Don't you realize that I'll call you out again in my FOI newsletter?

And is this really the best you have, ridiculous questions involving circular reasoning, ad hominen nonsense and misrepresentation of my FOIs? Show us the science!

Christine

There is no speculation. And gene transfection using viruses is an established reality. Done in hundreds of labs across the globe. Once again, how come this technology works if viruses do not exist?

To discuss, we will need to start at the beginning. I avoid question begging.

You don't seem to understand what begging the question actually is.

You don't seem to understand what anything is.

Still waiting for the answer to Thomas's question.
It seems that you are doing everything to deflect and avoid.

He is avoiding the question like the devil avoids holy water. He CAN NOT answer it. Same as claiming motors don't exist, yet we have working cars.

Keep avoiding the question. Pure. Isolation. Then we can move forward.

Ask Christine Massey. She knows. She's not saying. BUT she knows.

Christine Massey: “ Can I have a car that flies at 30,000 feet?”

Salesman: “Sorry we have no cars that do that”

Christine Massey: “CARS DONT EXIST”

Sounds like a lot of triggered response to avoid the fact that Christine is a liar.

Christine needs a car to go to the local shop. The sales team show her lots of cars. She insists on a flying one. Then she claims there are no cars at all.

(NB: note how every tweet leaves OUT the bit about flying)

What absolute rubbish, her website is.
