Greetings Michelle,

I'm writing to challenge you to cite valid primary and scientific evidence showing that "SARS-COV-2" (the specific alleged particle with the purported genome and proteins) exists and causes the nonspecific symptoms that are passed off as "covid-19" symptoms.

Reminder: scientific proof/evidence requires use of the scientific method to test falsifiable hypotheses through valid, rigorous, repeatable controlled experiments.

I also challenge you to cite valid scientific evidence of other alleged "coronaviruses" and contagion.

I don't believe that you can, because none exists, and I do believe that you have been complicit in fraud.

Your response or non-response will be made public.

Best wishes,
Christine

Dear Christine

There are many, many studies that show how SARS-Cov2 causes the wide range of symptoms observed when it infects humans. Mainly this is because the virus attaches to the ACE2 receptor which is found on different cell types (and the distribution differs with age as well).

A good summary can be found here:

<https://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/books/NBK554776/#:~:text=According%20to%20the%20National%20Institutes,late%20phase%20of%20the%20disease.>

This is a fully referenced, peer-reviewed article that links to all of the information you are seeking.

It is quite clear that SARS-Cov2 exists and in fact it has been viewed by an electron microscope. You can see some of these images here:

<https://www.microscopeworld.com/p-4317-covid-19-under-the-microscope.aspx>

Information about other coronaviruses can be found here:

<https://www.cdc.gov/coronavirus/types.html>

Coronaviruses are of course named because of their 'crown' like appearance on an electron micrograph.

I'm sorry that you choose not to believe me, the scientific community and the vast majority of the world's clinicians. I am not complicit in any fraud. However if you believe you have evidence to the contrary, I would urge you to submit it to the relevant authority <https://www.iompolice.im/report-it/>

Best wishes

Michelle

Greetings Michelle,

Surely you realize that looking at images of tiny particles is not how a particle is sequenced and characterized, and does not tell you where it came from or what it does.

I suggest you review the challenge. Either you didn't read it carefully or you don't comprehend the difference between primary scientific evidence and summaries (of pseudoscience) and unsubstantiated declarations.

If the summary includes references to valid scientific evidence, then you should have no difficulty in citing valid scientific evidence - which is what I've challenged you to do.

Again, I don't believe that you can, because there is no such evidence in the literature and 220 institutions in 40 countries have already demonstrated via freedom of information responses that they do not have any such evidence.

The policy officers on Island of Man have already been made aware of this evidence, and like yourself are complicit in the fraud.

Your response or non-response will be made public.

Best wishes,
Christine

Dear Christine

Thank you for your continued interest in developing your understanding of science and in particular molecular biology of viruses. I have spent many happy years in research laboratories carrying out PCR reactions, sequencing genes, growing cells in tissue culture and performing genetic studies.

Although I don't normally recommend Wikipedia as a resource due to its open editing, there is a reasonably accessible introductions to viruses here https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/History_of_virology which details many of the early experiments and has extensive references linked to the primary scientific studies carried out that have identified viruses of many types.

As I have explained many times on social media, it is very difficult to isolate viruses as they are obligate intracellular pathogens, and culturing and isolating them requires specialist equipment. However, no health authority needs to isolate whole viral particle to detect it's presence. It is enough to identify a unique sequence of the nucleic acid to identify the presence of the virus. These tests, whether PCR or LFT, are rapid and relatively easy to carry out and therefore suitable for a diagnostic setting such as a hospital.

One again if you have evidence that I have committed fraud, it is your public duty to report that evidence to the relevant authorities.

Gura mie eu as yeeareeyn share

Thanks and best wishes

Greetings Michelle,

Once again you have "misunderstood" the purpose of my communications.

Perhaps you've spent so many happy years running impossible-to-validate "virus" tests, assuming a "viral" origin of genetic material, pretending that made-up meaningless in silico "virus genomes" actually tell us something about the real world and irrationally blaming CPE in stressed cells on "viruses" that you've forgotten the scientific method and basic logic.

Citing a Wikipedia entry as valid scientific evidence of "viruses" and contagion is not a good look for you, nor are your logical fallacies (circular reasoning, appealing to your own authority, reification fallacies), nor your attempts to reverse the burden of proof, nor your false implication that I have not already made my evidence of the fraud/delusion known and available to anyone who will look/listen - including many who are complicit in said fraud/delusion.

If the Wikipedia entry contains references to valid scientific evidence, then you should have no difficulty in citing valid scientific evidence - which is what I've challenged you to do.

I'll give you a 3rd and final chance to meet the challenge. And I'm happy to copy on this conversation as many men and women who pass themselves off as "authorities" as possible.

Dear Christine,

Having just read your emails to and from my colleague Dr Haywood MHK and noted with concern the threatening tone therein, I have concluded that she undoubtedly has far more expertise and understanding of these matters than most of us you have chosen to include in your extensive global mailing list. In fact I tried to 'reply to all' but my email service refused to comply, so you may get this message twice.

I have no idea why you have included me in your mass email, but her suggestion of potential further action on your part seems the responsible option. Whilst I have friends who believe the Covid response was wrong, and I respect their views, I don't think this is the way to challenge 'the science'. Dr Haywood clearly caveated her citing Wikipedia as a possible source of information.

Please remove me from any further correspondence.

Yours sincerely

Stu,

Giving someone a heads-up that I will publish their responses is not a "threat", it's a courtesy.

I don't appreciate being accused of "threats" when I've made none. Kindly point out said alleged "threat" or I'll take your failure to do so as your tacit admission that I made none.

Also, fyi: I'm not remotely interested in your logical fallacies and opinions either.

Interesting how you jump to frame me as "threatening" instead of simply citing valid scientific evidence to settle the matter. And how you don't demonstrate even a modicum of interest in whether any such evidence exists. Wow.

Hi Mark,

Given your vague threat I have a need to respond to you.

I can't find any record of ever having emailed you before. What is the number of emails you have previously received from me, when exactly did this occur, and from which email address(es)?

Also, it's not clear what you mean by "formerly". Could you please explain your use of this term ("I am formerly requesting you ...")?

Who would you "complain" to and about what exactly?

If you believe I have trespassed against you in some way, you may serve me a Notice at this email address.

Greetings Mark,

I don't appreciate your vague repeated threats, especially when I've asked you to clarify the nature of your "complaint" and you fail to cooperate with me.

Please stop, as you are now causing me stress and I am starting to feel unsafe.

Again, if you believe I have trespassed against you in some way, you may serve me a Notice at this email address. Failure to do so will be taken as your tacit agreement that I have not trespassed against you in any way.

Christine

I apologise to everyone that Christine has dragged into this discussion.

On one hand, please consider that you have reached enough a high enough status in life that Christine considers you to be part of the 'authorities'. Congratulations.

On the other hand, Christine is a close associate of Mr Heading, who was recently convicted of harassment. Courtenay and Christine filmed an vlog together at the weekend which was shared with the IoM media (and on social media) I consider that Christine's actions are indicating that she too is now behaving in a similar way, designed to cause distress and to harass people.

I intend to block her from contacting me anymore so that I don't have to look into making a complaint to the Canadian authorities about her conduct, allegations and relentless missives. I suggest you do too.

Best wishes

Michelle has failed the challenge and quickly resorted to ad hominem arguments, a childish accusation and a not-so-veiled threat (not unlike Stu Peters and Mark Hempsall).

I wouldn't be surprised if none of you have ever read any of the foundational "science" for any alleged "virus", therefore I've attached the foundational "SARS-COV-2" study by Fan Wu et al. wherein the meaningless, fake "reference genome" of the imaginary "virus" was fabricated in silico from millions of sequences of unknown provenance detected in lung fluid, and other early Chinese studies, plus the CDC's pseudoscience from Harcourt et al. wherein stressed cells breaking down was passed off as "virus isolation" - on par with declaring Santa exists and has been "isolated" based on finding presents under a Christmas tree - and another fake "genome" was constructed.

Christine,

The tone of your emails is angry, entitled and threatening. They imply that you will circulate any replies you disagree with to others until someone agrees with you. In the fullness of time you might be proved right and others wrong, but I suggest that you're going about it in an unnecessarily aggressive way.

That's my final word on the subject so won't reply to anything further, even if you assert again that an absence of response means I agree with you (again, not helpful).

Yours sincerely

Stu Peters

Lol Stu, it's really interesting how you're bent on framing me as "angry, entitled, threatening" and "aggressive" - simply for inviting someone to cite valid primary scientific evidence of "coronaviruses" and contagion and then pointing out their failure and logical fallacies. And implying that anger is unlawful - hmm.

Your priorities and your disinterest in whether any alleged "coronavirus" has ever been shown to exist and whether contagion has ever been demonstrated is fascinating to say the least.

And your lack of evidence is noted, once again.

Christine
